small parish of Kellaway. The reason for the comparative sparseness of the upper strata is that methodically all the old tombs of the covenanting "martyrs" were visited by one Tom Morris, a man, Robert Patterson by name, who, somewhere about the end of the 18th century, quitted his trade of stone-cutting, took a horse, and commenced a lifelong pilgrimage, through the south counties of Scotland, the west coast repairing the decaying headstones of those, dear to covenanted and whose memory he declared he would perpetuate in stone, unto posterity." He was well known throughout Kellaway by the name of "Old Mortality" and his remains lie under a granite monument, which was made to resemble one of his own tombstones, and on which he is represented sitting by his pony and old grey mare stooping over his mallet and chisel at work. Balmaclellan Kirkcudbrightshire, near which town Kellaway is situated, is mentioned before. I can't agree with the covenanting principles, nor do I believe them to possess a tolerant spirit, there is no doubt, persecutors. Fate would have it that the other side should be the strongest, and so as conqueror, the Covenanters made a bonfire of

Dear Frank.
You could meet
Dad with a taxi here Tuesday, cut a day back on my head. Pains me awful, but I guess it is nothing serious.
Hope you are well and enjoying life. Write late.
